Dear Members,

Welcome to the 2010-11 BCGS season! I hope you have had a wonderful summer and are recharged for an exciting Fall filled with music and friends!

Our first concert features the incomparable Paul Galbraith on October 2nd at First Lutheran Church of Boston in the Back Bay. Paul’s exploits on the eight-string Brahms guitar have earned him accolades from around the world as one of the most unique artists in our field. You can hear how expansive his guitar sounds on his recent YouTube performance of Albeniz. The additional strings, cello-like setup, and resonator box transmit a rich, overtone-filled soundscape that reinterprets our standard repertoire while creating new possibilities for transcriptions and original works. Do not miss this rare chance to see Paul in New England!

Jason Vieaux continues our series on November 6, also at First Lutheran. The youngest winner ever of the Guitar Foundation of America, he has further propelled his career with a groundbreaking adaptation of Pat Metheny’s music to the classical guitar and highly successful recordings of Bach and Albeniz. Jason’s technique is one of the most polished that I have seen and his artistry is evident from the very first note he plays. It will be joy to host Jason this fall. Both season tickets (with a special limited-time rate) and single concert tickets are available online at www.itsmyseat.com/bcgs.html. Stay tuned for more information regarding our February concert with Ana Vidovic and April’s Festival 21, led by Frank Wallace.

2010-11 also marks the first full year of our guitar orchestra. I encourage all of you who play the guitar (all levels welcome!) to sign up with orchestra director Scott Borg (scottborgguitar@hotmail.com) and take part in an exciting and unique guitar experience. The more players we have, the happier the sound! We plan on having monthly rehearsals and several performances during the season, to be announced. Together, let’s make the orchestra a group of which the entire region can be proud!

Do check out other great guitar events during the year as well: The Hingham Library guitar series, organized by George Ward, will again showcase favorite local performers.

Under the guidance of Oscar Azaret, our performance parties are a thriving group of friendly and supportive guitar players and aficionados, gathering in private homes and cozy coffee-houses.

For a sampling of Boston’s next generation of classical guitarists, check out Zaira Meneses’s Guitar and Friends (guitarandfriends.com).

In a few weeks you will receive notice of our fall membership drive. Please renew your support of the BCGS or make an additional donation to support our programs and artists. We have one of the premier guitar concert series in the US and your help is critical in helping us spread the joys of our instrument.

As always, many thanks go out to BCGS Board members and volunteers: Will Riley, Thuy Wagner, Frank Wallace, George Ward, Oscar Azaret, Bill Hartner, George Attisano, and Karen and Jon Parsons. You make our events possible!

Have a colorful Fall season and see you soon,

The Way Life was Meant to Be
by Hildegunn Rodrick

Success and fame is the name of the game. Competition for the limelight and the adoration of great crowds drive the talented and the ambitious. Society and the media fuel the race, exalting some, while leaving broken dreams in their wake. How refreshing, then, to enter a home on a quiet Saturday afternoon and find the gathering of the BCGS.

The room is full of talent. Some bring name recognition, others aspirations, and then there are those who came just for the love of it. All are there to participate in the sharing of beautiful music. The atmosphere is welcoming and supportive. Each who brings a performance is given a turn. Shaky hands calm down and fumbling fingers are forgiven. You are among friends. The gift of music is offered freely, the gift of support and appreciation is returned joyfully. Could this be the way life was meant to be?

The underlying ideals of great spiritual philosophies are expressed here. Great gifts are exchanged in a quiet, simple place unnoticed by most. A hindu proverb says “They who give have all things; they who withhold have nothing”. Though the challenges and solutions of our lives are complex, to me there is a profound “rightness” in this simple offering and receiving of the gift of music poured from passionate hearts.

North Meadow House Concert Series Announces Fall Concerts

Saturday, October 23, 7:30 pm. The Piano Guitar Duo of Anne Ku and Robert Bekkers will perform at the North Meadow House Concert Series. Based in the Netherlands, this young duo is doing very exciting things with the somewhat neglected chamber combination of piano and guitar. Robert gets a huge sound from his Hilhorst guitar that competes well with Anne Ku’s powerful piano playing. They have a delightful website with many interesting works posted for listening (recommended: “When Bach, Stravinsky and the Who Met”!!!) http://www.pianoguitar.com/about.htm

Friday, November 12, 7:30 pm. Michael Nicolella will perform a recital of original and newly arranged works for guitar. Michael is a terrific player with an astounding repertoire of original works (some of which involve tape and electric guitar). Originally from Rhode Island, Michael is now based in Seattle so it is indeed a rare pleasure to be able to hear him on this coast again. One look at his website will convince you of Michael’s joyful and eclectic approach to music! http://www.nicolella.com/news.htm

North Meadow House Concert are presented in the home of Mark and Beverly Davis in Hampton, CT. Tickets are $15.00; reservations are required, as seating is limited. If you are interested in attending these concerts, or would like to be on the North Meadow e-mail list for concert, master classes and workshops please write to: markmdavis@yahoo.com
A Sixteenth Century Spanish Mystic and a Dead Cat
by Donna Ricci

A sixteenth century Spanish mystic and a dead cat brought me back home to my truest love, the love of music. I studied music as an undergraduate in the mid-1970’s, graduated with a double major in music and history and was certified to teach both. I then did what most of us did back then, went into business since there were no available teaching jobs in the late 1970’s. But that wasn’t the only thing that lead me away from music. At that time, I used to attend Friday afternoon concerts at Symphony Hall, the matinee costing $4.00, which was very attractive to a recently graduated woman with no prospective job on the horizon. On this particular Friday afternoon the program opened with a Stravinsky piece, not my favorite composer, and I sat un-inspired through the first half. I considered leaving, yet never one to leave things undone I decided to stay for the second half of the program. It was the debut of a young cellist. I noted that he was just about my age and I thought, “Hmm, let’s see what this kid can do.” He began playing the Dvorak Cello concerto. From the first note I was spellbound; I am surprised I did not fall out of my balcony seat onto the floor below I was so caught up in the power of his playing. I sat enthralled until the final note. As I left Symphony Hall, walking down Huntington Avenue in a daze, I thought, “How could I possibly consider a profession in music, having just heard what I did. How could I ever express myself like that?” And while this was not the main reason I left music for so long, it had a powerful influence on me. Of course, I could not have understood then what it meant to be comparing myself to Yo Yo Ma.

Many years passed where I drifted far from music and did this psychology thing. In July of 2004 I moved to Newburyport with my two aged and ailing cats, Basil and Sage. That fall, I hosted a party for my new neighbors. After everyone had left, Basil, who I had thought was completely deaf now in his 16th year, seemed to respond to the sound of music. At that time, I used to attend Friday afternoon concerts at Symphony Hall, the matinee costing $4.00, which was very attractive to a recently graduated woman with no prospective job on the horizon. On this particular Friday afternoon the program opened with a Stravinsky piece, not my favorite composer, and I sat uninspired through the first half. I considered leaving, yet never one to leave things undone I decided to stay for the second half of the program. I was the debut of a young cellist. I noted that he was just about my age and I thought, “Hmm, let’s see what this kid can do.” He began playing the Dvorak Cello concerto. From the first note I was spellbound; I am surprised I did not fall out of my balcony seat onto the floor below I was so caught up in the power of his playing. I sat enthralled until the final note. As I left Symphony Hall, walking down Huntington Avenue in a daze, I thought, “How could I possibly consider a profession in music, having just heard what I did. How could I ever express myself like that?” And while this was not the main reason I left music for so long, it had a powerful influence on me. Of course, I could not have understood then what it meant to be comparing myself to Yo Yo Ma.

On a parallel course, over the years I would occasionally get messages from St. Theresa of Avila, a sixteenth century Spanish mystic. It wasn’t like I was hearing voices while brushing my teeth or seeing apparitions in my cereal. She was a little more subtle than that. I would open a bureau draw and find one of those prayer cards with her “Let nothing disturb thee” prayer on it and have no idea how it got there. One day her famous book, Interior Castles was sitting on my bookshelf, but I had no recollection of buying it. In the winter of 2005 and 2006 her name kept coming up in conversation. I had heard that the medical intuitive Carolyn Myss was going to be speaking in New York City at a time when I was going to be there and I decided to hear her before I even knew what the topic was. She was, in fact, talking about her newest book, Entering the Castle, her experiences with messages she received from St. Theresa of Avila. That winter I recommended St. Theresa’s Interior Castle to my church book club and moderated the discussion. In preparation for this I needed to buy another copy of the book - the mysterious one having disappeared off my shelf! While in the bookstore I looked up and saw a CD entitled Avila. I bought the CD, sight unseen or, rather, sound unheard. When I got it home and realized it was classical guitar I thought, “I don’t even like classical guitar. Why did I buy this?” But I listened to it several times and thought, “This is really good.” I even consider emailing the guitarist but prayed to Theresa to keep me from going down the road of classical guitar groupies. She must have obliged because I tossed the CD aside and went about my business.

So here is where it comes together. That spring, Sage became sick. I was reminded of Basil and why I began playing mandolin so I took it out again. At this time I had scheduled a meeting with the Newburyport Welcome Wagon Lady for business purposes. She was shocked to realize she had not visited me when I first moved in two years prior. “How did that happen?” she asked, as if somehow I had intentionally avoided her visit. “I never miss anyone!” I know how it happened. It wasn’t my time. But now it was.

Because in the course of our business, she gave me the new resident packet of discount coupons. One of the coupons was for a free half hour music lesson at the Musical Suite. I called the Musical Suite and was told they didn’t have a mandolin teacher but they had a classical guitar teacher, John Tavano, and that he would call me. When he left his name on my voice mail I thought, “Why does that name sound familiar?” I pulled out the CD and saw that the teacher who called me and the guitarist on Avila were one and the same. So I began studying mandolin with John. In short time I realized I wanted to play guitar, so I bought a folk guitar. But like the mandolin, I was not inspired to practice. During a lesson I played John’s classical guitar. Once my fingers touched the nylon strings of this instrument I had a musical experience unlike any I had known. Nothing had ever felt so right. Something that had whispered to me long ago was singing in a loud and resonant voice.

Shortly after I began studying classical guitar with John, I asked, “Why did you name your CD Avila?” He said, “I was in a bookstore and I looked up and I saw this book entitled Avila.” Sitting across from him, my guitar in my lap, I thought of Basil and St. Theresa and knew at that moment, they had brought me home.
